Eventually the board voted to approve both the vacation and subdivision, stipulating that Stiltner provide $2,500 worth of materials to improve Upper Glenway Street.

Board fills vacancy on Planning Commission

Resident Charlie Ihlenfeld applied for the open seat on the Planning Commission. Ihlenfeld said he was a general contractor who had lived in Palmer Lake for 28 years. The board voted unanimously to appoint him to the commission.

Bridge design sparks controversy

Green-Sinnard showed the board the proposed design for a bridge to span the railroad track and more directly connect Palmer Lake park to the rest of the town. The design, developed by architect Bill Fisher and partially funded by the Great Outdoors Colorado (GOCO) grant the town received, uses shipping containers to suggest railroad cars, making an indirect reference to the lake's use in the past as a watering station for trains.

Schuler and Banta questioned the use of shipping containers in the design.

Questions were also raised about whether Awake the Lake, the nonprofit administering the GOCO grant, was properly consulting the board before taking action.

The board decided to invite Fisher to a future meeting to discuss his design.
