

teaches children to look back at sources of what is good, beautiful, and true and that this [proclamation] is part of that.

- Board member Meghan St. Aubyn said that current legislation and societal trends were taking away from women and girls to accommodate another protected class. Women who came before us fought for equal rights and dedicated their lives to fight for the right to have control over their bodies, minds, and finances, she said. Many modern women are standing by, she said, while those rights are taken from our daughters. Her daughter

- Board member Lindsay Clinton said these issues revolve around a small number of students who are experiencing confusion with the expectation that the entire community must make accommodations. She said MA should focus on the majority it serves
